119 Midwood Street sits on a quiet tree lined block in the heart of the Prospect-Lefferts Gardens Historic District. Built in 1899 as part of a row of 15 townhouses by architect George Lawton and developer William A. A. Brown, 119 Midwood Street is designed in a transitional style that encompasses both Romanesque Revival and neo-Renaissance elements. This single family-home has its original layout intact and contains a lot of original detail. The backyard is sunny and quiet and awaits your green thumb. 119 Midwood Street is ready for a full renovation; bring your contractor and architect and make this historic gem your own. Prospect Park is just two blocks away and the 2, 5, B, Q and S trains are nearby for a quick commute to Manhattan.
